WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, facing stiff congressional resistance to its planned $1 billion arms sale to Saudi Arabia, is tentatively offering to withdraw 1,600 Maverick antitank missiles from the package in hopes of making the deal more palatable to critics.

Sources said Monday that the administration was trying to de-termine whether concern in Congress over threats to Israel's security would be assuaged if ident Ronald Reagan delayed the $360 million Maverick sale indefinitely.

The sources stressed, though, that the idea was being discussed informally and that a decision had

On June 11, Mr. Reagan withdrew a proposal to sell the Mavericks after it became evident that Congress would vote overwhelmingly to block the deal.

When it became known last month that the administration was considering resubmitting the sale as part of a larger package, oppo-nents warned that it would touch off a major new test of strength between the White House and the Democratic-controlled Congress.

The plan being pressed by the administration in informal talks with Congress, the sources said, gives priority to the sale of 12 F-15C and F-15D jet fighters to serve as replacements for Saudi planes that crash or wear out in the next few years.

In return, the administration will reportedly promise not to provide the Saudis with the F-15E, a substantially improved model.

According to the sources, the tentative plan to emphasize sale of the F-15s was dictated by a desire to keep the Saudi air fleet at maximum strength during tension in Iran-Iraq war.

In addition, manufacture of the earlier-model F-15s will be phased out next year, and the administration, which estimates that the Saudis will need several replacements beginning in 1990, must act soon if the planes are to be built.

The sources said intensive administration lobbying with Congress and American Jewish groups was being assessed by senior officials from the State and Defense departments, the National Security Council staff and the Office of fanagement and Budget. The administration viewpoint has been divided between two sets of officials. One group, centered in the State Department and the Pentagon, believes that U.S. credibility with the Saudis requires pushing the sale even at the risk of A more politically oriented fac-

The sources said the administration's tentative view was that the opponents still had sufficient votes in Congress to block the sale but that concessions under discussion would probably swing enough votes to keep the opposi-tion from overriding a Reagan

However, the sources noted, these items are regarded as less important than the F-15s and could be removed from the package if the administration decided that such a move would win more support for the plane sale.

Mr. Gelli, the former head of the Propaganda Due, or P-2, lodge who surrendered Monday, is considered the central figure in a network of spying, blackmail, fraud and rightist political terrorism in Italy. At the time of his escape on Aug. 10, 1983, Mr. Gelli was awaiting extradition to Italy on charges of fraudulent bankruptcy in the $1.4 billion collapse in 1982 of Banco Ambrosiano, Italy's largest private bank.

The Italian Justice Ministry announced Tuesday evening that it had asked Switzerland for Mr. Gelli's extradition on new charges issued by magistrates during his four years in hiding. Those include subvenive association, a blanket charge in terrorism cases, in connection with the bombing of the Bologna train station Aug. 2, 1980, in which 85 people: were killed and 200 injured. Authorities blame rightist terrorists for the massacre.

U.S. Delays on New Moscow Embassy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government officials agreed Tuesday to wait for at least a year before adopting plans to reconstruct the new U.S. Embassy in Moscow, a congressman said. The new building is said to be so riddled with Soviet listening devices that it cannot be used.

Representative Daniel A. Mica, chairman of the House Foreign Affain.

Subcommittee on International Operations, said he had been assured that the Reagan administration had not made a firm decision to raze and rebuild the top five floors of the eight-story embassy. He said that the administration wants instead to spend $20 million to $30 million to rehabilitate the existing embassy and use it for at least five years until the new building can meet strict security standards.

Stronger Growth, Please

magic circle known as the Group of 10, show good cheer to the point of complacency. The Latin American Development largest debtors; is despondent. There is political slant in both views.

The International Monetary Fund, with less built-in bias, tries to tell it as it is. The story is not cheerful. Unless policies change, annual growth in the rich world, which dominates conditions elsewhere, seems to be stuck at around 2.5 percent, in sad contrast with the 4.5 to 5 percent of the 1960s and early 70s. This rate is better than a recession but is unlikely to ease global problems. Neither unemployment in the rich countries nor the debt problems of the poor can be shifted away from the peril point without stronger growth, which the rich have to lead.

The Group of 10, proud that its members are in their fifth successive year of expansion, might recall that the starting point was highly depressed, that welfare lines have simply stopped growing quite so fast, and that the international debt storm still rages. It is hard to be confident which weigh so heavily on developed and that perpetuation of the present system, which is about all that present growth in the world economy can promise, will avert social and political upsets in the non-communist world in the coming years.

A more expansionary world economy will not be easy to achieve. Much has changed since the early '70s. The trade-off between growth and inflation has worsof dominant market positions when de- ease the world's present ailments. mand is strong. They have also become INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE

And the mass of the long-term unemployed no longer Bank, representing the poorer world's restrain wages, because they do not compete for jobs. Additionally, the rising volatility of money flows across borders renders the task of policy-making far more difficult. And the vertiginous growth of taxes - they take 37 percent of the rich world's income, against 27 percent a few decades ago - probably saps the private initiative on which growth in market economies ultimately relies. Many governments therefore prefer discretion to valor, and assume that the natural rate of unemployment (the rate commensurate with low inflation) has simply risen and must be tolerated. Other observers think that jobs could still be created by old-fashioned reflationary methods, because if rising unemployment no longer reduces wage pressure, it is also true that shrinking unemployment, for some time, will not increase it. Both theses are uncertain. But action to reduce the lump of longterm unemployment, and the low demand. developing countries alike, could go faster than government advisers now envisage.

Creditor governments are naturally suspicious of May Day shipwreck messages from debtors. During his 10-day visit to the United States, the church leader reminded American Catholics that dissent from church law is "a grave error." And the world leader reminded all Americans of the responsibility that the rich have for the poor. "As a nation that has received so much." he said. America "is called to continued generosity and service toward others."

John Paul may not know the term "the Me generation," but there were times when it sounded as if he were challenging "the Me country" - and never more so than on the last day of his visit to the United States. "You may choose to close in on yourselves, to enjoy the fruits of your own form of

One Step in Managua

The closing of La Prensa in Managua 15 months ago was a grim tightening of the Sendinist grip, and so it is only fair to hail the reopening of the newspaper as a harbinger of loosening. The Nicaraguan political opposition will again have a voice - presumably a full-throated and uncensored one, for otherwise the gesture is a farce. No single step that the Sandinists could have taken to meet their early obligations under the Central American peace plan has the same potential importance inside the country and the same resonance outside.

But it remains only a single step. Secretary of State George Shultz suggested recently what a reasonable "scorecard" might be: return of all expelled priests, and notjust the best known; release of all the thonsands of political prisoners; press freedom extending well beyond "censored stalwarts" like La Prensa. The "basic test," he said, is whether Daniel Ortega engages "the [contra] resistance and the other [internal] Nicaraguan opposition parties in a true dialogue."

Here is the pinch. The Sandinists are a Marxist-Leninist party profoundly antagonistic to democracy. It misreads them to sav that they are not true believers. They have rewritten their country's basic law, for instance, to subordinate the army and security forces to their party alone. This is how President Ortega comes to have the authority to "authorize," as the announcement said, reopening La Prensa. What he can give he can take away. Reopening La Prensa seems to be the sort of small test that he is ready to face not to bring democracy but to avoid democracy. Using what influence is available to insist that the Sandinists move on from small tests to large ones is the challenge before the Latin democracies now.

The Reagan administration is convinced that the clear certainty of resumed contra sid would be the most useful form that such influence could currently take. Their history and politics, however, lead most Central Americans to see that as an unacceptable form of U.S. intervention. They did not embrace a peace plan thinking that there was the stuff of a second democratic Costa Rica in Nicaragua. They did so believing, on the basis of six years' experience, that they preferred the rigors of peace to the rigors of continued contra war. This was the moment. they figured, to induce the Sandinists to buy off the contras' attack with progress toward pluralism. The reopening of La Prensa indicates the progress made — and the progress still to be made — in this risky passage.

That's One Big Credit Card

Depending on how you do the arithmetic, Ronald Reagan has raised taxes from 10 to 20 percent. That thought came to me from Gilbert Noble, a Californian accountant. "Deficit spending is more taxes," he wrote.
"It's the same thing as using your credit card on a vacation. If you pay $1,000 cash and charge $2,000, your vacation costs $3,000,"

What Mr. Reagan has done, of course, has been to defer his tax increases, but they are as sure as death. The Democrats, Mr. not be satisfactory to Iraq but surely offers Noble went on, must go on the offensive on taxes, pointing out "that $2 trillion added to the national debt is in fact additional taxes ... For Reagan to say he has not raised taxes is a lie and a cruel hoax."

Keeping a Door Open to Iran

The capacity of the Arab League to coerce Iran into making peace is limited; in practice that is also true of the UN Security Council. Sanctions could be passed, but Iran's sources of supply are too diverse; her capacity to substitute human resources for military technology is well known. Yet Iran is not enjoying either the war or her diplomatic isolation. Her offer of an "undeclared cease-fire" while some ground for diplomacy to work on. The pressure on Iran should be kept up but her bona fides in seeking terms for peace should not be dismissed out of hand. No other course offers any more credible hope.

Progress, but We're Not Out of the Woods

PARIS — The "double zero" treaty to eliminate Soviet and American medium-range muclear missiles is not quite wrapped up, but it is well on its way. Already progress on this fimited issue is sparking new efforts on more critical problems — the big long-range missiles, the balance of conventional forces, nuclear testing. So it is right to see the successful negotiations as a breakthrough and to evaluate it. There has already been a good deal of foolish speculation.

People ask, is it the end of the Cold War? No.

but it is the start of a new period in East-West relations whose development cannot be foreseen. Is it the denuclearization of Europe? No, but, as NATO's secretary-general, Lord Carrington, has said, it does mean that "Europe will become a much less nuclear place."

Is it the beginning of the end of U.S. commit-ment to the defense of Western Europe? No. There are 325,000 American troops to incarnate the conviction that American and European security are a common stake. There will be a lot more fuzzy debate about the importance of the treaty and what it portends, in both the United States and Europe, when it is signed and offered for ratification. It matters to put it in perspective from the outset. 1. In strict military terms, the treaty does not make a huge difference. To the extent that it changes the nuclear balance, it definitely favors the West and Asia, but the arsenals are still so huge and varied that the change will be marginal.

2. The deployment of American missiles in Europe was undertaken more for political than for military reasons. Other, less controversial meaBy Flora Lewis sures could have met the military threat of Soviet SS-20s. NATO felt it should make a demonstrative response to the threat of political intimidation that could weaken, or "decouple," Atlantic ties. This was achieved; the Russians are to pull out their sailes. The treaty is a political gain for the West.

3. The gain was won by steadfastness in the alliance as a whole, despite all the bickering and spurts of recrimination. It is impossible to say just what elements of the situation decided the Soviet turnaround, whether it was the Reagan administration's military buildup or Mikhail Gorbacher's sense of need for lessened East-West tensions to promote his domestic reform plans. But Soviet failure to split the alliance was crucia

4. Much of the European doubt and concern now expressed comes because leaders bought their own hard-sell arguments when American deployments were launched. They antomatically get worried when there is a change in the barometer of Soviet-American relations, either for better or for worse, until they see what it actually means for them. They will be reassured when they see the satisfaction of their own publics as the missiles start to be removed, and as their military planners adjust to new calculations.

5. Meanwhile, the agitation within establishments has led to new talk about more defense cooperation among Europeans. This is all to the good, especially because there is little chance of an increase in European conventional defense. That is all the more reason to move rapidly to probe

Soviet suggestions for military talks on balancing conventional forces at lower levels.

Even more important than the removal of ome missiles, however, are certain precedents that the impending treaty will set. There is symbolic meaning, which should be neither exaggerated nor brushed aside, in the fact that for the first time in the East-West arms race there is actually going to be joint reduction of one part of the arsenals instead of partial limits on expansion, as before. The arms race isn't over, but at last there is some official recognition of its futility. There will also be concrete new action.

 Missiles will be physically destroyed, presumably before a global television audience, for the first time. Experts are only now facing the very complex problems that this will bring, particularly ith solid-fuel missiles that are too dangerous simply to dismantle. The studies and experience can prove valuable for future disarmament measures, if such measures are negotiated.

2. An elaborate verification system will be put into effect, involving on-site inspection for the first time. It will not be as intrusive as originally thought, largely because Washington backed away from the idea of too many Russians poking around sensitive areas when Moscow imexpectedly reversed itself on inspections. However, the practice of verification will provide an important test for provisions in an mal treaty to cut back strategic missiles, perhaps making it a little easier to negotiate. All this is progress, to be taken with sober satisfaction. We are not out of the woods, by a long shot, but we are walking again.

Gulf War: Seven Years Old and No End in Sight

WASHINGTON — The war be tween Iran and Iraq entered its eighth year this week. No one in the Western capitals knows the full extent of casualties, and it is doubtful that even Tehran or Baghdad has reliable figures. But estimates run to well over half a million killed on each side, including civilians, and no end to the war is in sight.

Iraq closed the seventh year of combat by employing the air force, its most effective weapon, against Iran's most vulnerable targets: the refineries, oil lines, oil ports and tankers that handle Iran's primary export. Oil keeps the Iranian war machine going. Intelligence sources in the United States and abroad conclude that Iraq must continue its air offensive against the Iranian oil industry to force Tehran to reduce its war effort. Making allowance for exaggerated Iraqi claims, these sources feel fairly confident that Iran has suffered severely from the offensive and will suffer more as the year continues.

Iran has been unable to halt Iraqi bombers. Tehran's fighter force has too few aircraft and trained pilots. Iran has surface-to-air missiles — 12 battalions of U.S.-made Hawk missiles were available at the war's outset. - but these have been singularly ineffective. And an early warning system begun under the shah was never comted. So the Iraqis can pretty much pick the time and place for attacks, and carry them out with impunity.

international political positions. Middle East sources report that there are indications that the Revolutionary Guards and the regular army are planning yet another "final offen-sive," although the area chosen for attack is as yet unknown.

A major offensive remains possible, although recent intelligence reports have indicated that even the fanatical leadership of the Revolutionary Guards in Tehran was shaken by the number of "martyrs" sent to paradise by Iraqi fire in the heavy attacks on Basra early this year.

Iran can stand more losses, but barely. Whether Iraq can do so -its population is one-third that of Iran's is problematical. Casualties have been heavy, especially among the trained troops who form the majority of the fighting forces. They are well-armed and disciplined, but if an offensive hits they will suffer.

Trade Deficit: Americans Will Have to Get Used to It

BOSTON—The U.S. trade deficit grew when the dollar was soarand when it was slumping, when the budget deficit was widening and when it was shrinking. It has been a trade deficit for all seasons. The trade deficit's underlying cause probably has little to do with finance. More likely, it is rooted in the globalization of technology, which has allowed new members to join the ranks of the industrial countries. As long as this process continues, the trade deficit will persist despite Americans' best efforts. In fact. Americans' hest efforts could easily make things worse. For the established members of the industrial club, now including Japan. adjustment to this new competition is difficult. Today they are more or less equal. They remain much higher than in the "new" countries — perhaps six times the South Korean level, for example. But South Korean wages and working conditions are shifting sharply in favor of employees, forc-ing businesses to reassess their global production strategies. Such labor market developments, and the politi-cal and social changes with which they are bound up, will make South Korea and other Asian industrial countries much larger consumers of their own products, and of imports.

The problem with the developing countries of Latin America is more difficult. Since their capacity to service debt depends on their ability to export still more manufactured goods, their industrial challenge to the rest of the world may be only beginning.

deficit. In the present strong economy, it would be self-defeating to push for more exports: Further rapid increases in exports would only produce inflation without materially reducing the trade deficit. In the longer term. America cannot expect to cut its deficit by outcompeting the other established industrial countries. Too great success would threaten them with recession and America with a political and economic backlash.

The only sustainable export market is among the developing countries. But to increase sales to them quickly, the United States would have to import more industrial goods from them, pay higher prices for their raw materials or forgive their debts. While it is doing some of each of these things, it is doubtful that it is ready to do so on a much larger scale. Imports could be reduced through import substitution, reduction of gen-eral demand and protectionism. For now, substitution (making things at home rather than importing them) has the same drawback as export increases - heightening inflationary pressure on domestic resources. Reduction of demand is a exphemism for recession, which no one wants. Unfortunately, protectionism is probably the only way to shrink the deficit in a hurry.

So long as America's major trading partners cling to surpluses or remain condemned to them by their debts, Americans must learn if not to love the deficit at least to become more relaxed about it. They should content themselves with glacial progress until the new industrial competitors become vigorous buyers as well as sellers.

Again, They Make Him Make Him

Look Good By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON — What people call "Ronald Reagan's luck" was amply demonstrated again last week. And again it is the character of his adversaries that enables the president to look so good.

So it has been throughout Mr. Reagan's political career. When he first ran for governor of California in 1966, he came up against Edmund (Pat) Brown, the two-term Democratic incombent. Mr. Brown had enough charm and evident good will to have survived several verbal and political gaffes. But his administration had run out of gas and the voters had exhansted their patience. Enter "citizen-pol-In 1970, the Democrats chose As-

Mr. Unruh, a brilliant politician of uncontrolled temperament had slimmed down from the 300 pound (135 kilogram) "Big Daddy" he had been, but the image of the roughned boss of the legislature was indelible. Mr. Reagan won easily. In 1980, running for the presidency,

Mr. Reagan faced Jimmy Carter, who was battered by inflation, the hostage crisis and repeated displays of mea-tainty. Result: a Reagan landslide. In 1984, it was Walter Moudale, carrying the burden of the Carter record. The Resean landslide was even larger. These last three years have been far from easy for Mr. Reagan. But again in recent days, he has benefited from the shortcomings of those he faced.

Consider the scene Friday in the White House briefing room. The president has just announced an "agree-ment in principle" with the Soviet Union on the first arms control treaty of the 1980s. He pauses to answer questions. What does the television andience see and hear? Three grown men, certainly among the most promi-nent television journalists in the land, start screaming questions — "What about the shooting [of a.U.S. military observer in East Germany]?" "What about the evil empire?" - and none gives Mr. Reagan time to answer.

No wonder the wire service reporters visible in the television picture hung their heads. I hold no brief for White House news management techmiques - parading Mr. Reagan out to read from a script and indicating he will leave before reporters have time to question him. But when the TV reporters the public knows best act like 5year-olds who have missed their naps. viewers will conclude the president is justified to avoid such encounters.

And what of the agreement the president announced? It is a modest achievement, affecting about 3 percent of the nuclear weapons in the U.S. and Soviet arsenals. But it is an achievement, and it opens the way for accelerated negotiations on the far more difficult and vital question of long-range nuclear missiles.

Reagan to the Republican Party. It shows skeptics that building up U.S. military power is not simply an end in itself but may make the Soviets more tractable. It gives the administration a diplomatic victory perhaps large enough to eclipse, if not erase, the damage of the lean-contra affair.

The major Republican candidates for the 1988 nomination, George Buth and Bob Dole, recognize this. But those scrambling for a foothold in the party's right wing — Jack Kemp, Fierre du Pont, Alexander Haig and the Reverend Pat Robertson - are describing the proposed agreement # a threat to the West. Lacking the courage to challenge Mr. Reagan directly, they blame it on Secretary of State George Shultz. With critics like these, Mr. Reagan looks magnificently mod-

A lot more than emotion is involved. The spread of AIDS to heterosexuals AIDS study group at the State University of New York Health Science Center in Brooklyn, says that in New York City alone there are 100,000 intrave-nous drug-using males who have been infected with AIDS and there are 15,000 to 20,000 women who have been infected by having sex with addicts using contaminated needles. Only God knows how many other women will get the virus in the years ahead.

But will these women spread AIDS to heterosexual men who will then spread it to other heterosexual women? There are few known cases of that having happened in the United States

Yet to assume it will not happen, in a disease known only for a few years

N EW YORK — The fire is spread-ing and we can see it from our and transmission, is the most danger-house. But we stand in the doorway and ous kind of self-deluding complacency. say it is not our fire; it is theirs, AIDS has become a disease of heterothose people down the street, and we sexuals in Africa, and to say it cannot happen in the United States is not science but Russian roulette.

Katie Leishman, in an article in the February issue of The Atlantic on heterosexuality and AIDS, put it this way: "It can't burt to think of the virus as having an intelligence, and a commitment to survival that exceeds that of many people."

There is no cure or vaccine for AIDS. and there may not be for decades. Therefore, only people can fight it — people with the AIDS virus and people without it. Without the effort of one pression of compassion from time to group, the other will fail.

The untouched need the help of the sufferers and the AIDS carriers, who have to make the moral commitment not to have sexual intercourse with those not affected. There is no other way for the victims to guarantee - for their own souls' sake - that they are not spreading death. Society must persuade those who may have had sexual intercourse with carriers to be tested.

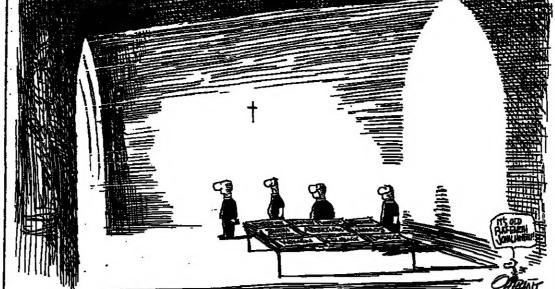

So it is plain self-interest -- as well as plain humanity — to try to protect anybody who may carry AIDS from the fearful discrimination, bigotry and iso-lation that goes with the disease. We will never succeed entirely, but at least the sufferers and their friends and families can be shown that the country is trying, through social education and through legislation.

Now comes the Reagan administration and announces that it is against is documented, in bitter statistics. Dr. proposed federal legislation aimed at Sheldon H. Landesman, director of the protecting victims of AIDS from discrimination. Leave it to the states, says Dr. Otis R. Bowen, the secretary of health and human services. That stance helps neither health nor human services. There is no legal reason to prevent a federal statute forbidding discrimination against AIDS victims. And the administration acknowledges that infected per-acus have been subject to discrimination. But Dr. Bowen says that such discrimination should be fought state by state. Or, don't do in one way what can be done 50 different ways - provided some states want to do it at all Dr. Bowen explains that under a system of state anti-discrimination laws, each state and Congress "will be able to observe and learn from the results." AIDS carriers also will learn from Dr. Bowen. They will learn that as far as federal protection is concerned they are abandoned. The "moral commitment" argument to AIDS carriers will still be valid. But unless the Congress refuses to go along with the adment may ring terribly hollow.

O.K., you American radical wackos, this is the pope! Throw down your liberal catechisms and ecumenical propaganda and genuflect on out here, quicksmart!

Vietnam: An American Who Was There Saw It Differently

Regarding the opinion column "Viet Diem were to survive, and there is no record of their expressing themselves in Worthy Partners" (Sept. 15):

As an American who lived through much of what Ambassador Bui Diem describes, I can only comment in sorrow at the inaccuracy of his account.

I remember the future Vietnamese ambassador as ingratiatingly pro-American, not as someone with doubts about the help that the United States attempted, perhaps ill-advisedly, to bring his country. How deep were his doubts when I first met him in 1966? How clearly did he express them to us, his many American friends and colleagues? "At the top levels of the administration, there is no evidence that anyone considered the South Vietnamese as partners," he writes. This is selective memory, at best. Beginning in 1955 (when I first visited Seigon on a fact-finding expedi-tion), considerable effort was being made to enlist Vietnamese cooperation in resisting Communist subversion, and this soon expanded into an extensive and loy-al partnership. In 1966 and 1967, for example, I ran a program that trained about 50,000 South Vietnamese rural pacification cadres to go into the country and help their compatrious resist the Communist takeover. We Americans did our best to turn the running of this and similar programs over to the Vietnamese. "Had the South Vietnamese been consulted in early 1965, it is likely they would have preferred either no intervention or a limited effort," the ambassador writes. Unfortunately, such alternatives record of their expressing themselves in favor of either captivity or suicide. "An agreement among the United States, South Vietnam and Laos, allowing U.S. troops to be stationed along the 17th parallel as a barrier, would have been quite feasible at the time," he writes. In fact, the main infiltration of North Vietnamese regular and irregular troops, as well as covert organizers, did not take place across the 17th parallel, as the ambassador knows. It came south through Laos and Cambodia; to talk of a stationary line along the parallel is nonsense.

If the United States made errors — and I believe not only that it did, but that the greatest of them was to inject itself into Vietnam's fratricidal quarrel — it was to consider that what we called "the South Vietnamese" were one people. The fact that most of them spoke a southern Chinese dialect that we came to call Vietnamese does not mean that they were united by a common nationalism. The Chinese, the Cambodians, the "hill tribes" speaking roughly a dozen different languages, the Roman Catholics and the other non-Buddhist religious groups were minorities who may have added up to a majority.

It is misleading, therefore, for the ambassador to pretend that the "South Vietnamese" were one nation, blessed with a nationalist consensus at variance with the policy of the United States.

In this lack of a South Vietnamese consensus, in fact, lay the problem we both faced. Therein also lay the reason why we Americans should were not available if people such as Bui perhaps not have become involved.

And, finally, therein certainly lies the

Helping Raise the Numbers

Daniel Dagan's perceptive article, bers in Moscow" (Aug. 29), inaccurately asserts that there have been no known joint efforts by German and Jewish organizations to pressure Soviet authorities to treat visa applicants more generously.

In March 1986, the Volkswagen Foundation and I sponsored a conference on the rights of Soviet minorities. specifically Germans and Jews, which ssued a declaration calling for freedom of movement. Prominent academic and public figures, including officials of the Christian Democratic Union and the Social Democratic Party, took part.

The conference's organizers, the Amer-ican Jewish Committee and the Institut Pur Ostrecht of Cologue University, are preparing an account of the proceedings for publication. Shortly after the conference ended, the Bundestag passed its first resolution on Soviet Jewry, calling on Moscow to grant Jews basic human rights including the right to emigrate.

If the emigration numbers have grown, perhaps it is in part because of efforts such as these.

between high school and college. I have never been to a Catskill resort and no one ever called me Baby - at least not in public. But Baby is an unusual heroine in that she is a rather ordinary sort of girl on the bridge to womanhood.

Nost legion movies are legion. "Summer of '42," "American Graffiti," "Back to the Future," "Radio Days" and "Peggy Sue Got Married" come quickly to mind. Many have entertained, even touched me, but none has quite so moved me as "Dirty Dancing." The music and dance rhythms are persuasive; more important, I faltered, swooned and kept the story beat with Baby.

The morning after "Dirty Dancing."
I read reviews in Newsday and The New York Times, hoping better to understand its pull on me. The favorable critiques, both by men, did not notice the unu ness of a coming of age story from a girl's point of view. Nonetheless, the clips yielded a valuable clue; The movie's creenwriter is a woman, Ellen Bergstein The adult me can admit that the film has some chunky lines and that its romance is essentially adolescent (which is why the teen-ager resurrected in me loved it), but the adult also can say that it is a quirky, courageous movie. It takes special nerve as well as verve to script a personal feature film.

Women who risk dramatizing women usually choose the neutralizing stance of humor, or they safely splinter them-selves into several personalities, each representing a different type of woman (Clare Boothe's play "The Women," Mary McCarthy's novel "The Group," Wendy Wasserstein's also "The Group," Wendy Wasserstein's play "Uncommon Women"). The truth is more integrated and difficult. Many women are or were Baby, perhaps at 15, perhaps at 25. We were simultaneously shy and curious, traditional and rebellious, afraid and fearless, stupid and smart.

I do not know what the average age of inner reconciliation is, but it certainly appeared that my high school class-mates, female and male, had reached it. A few of us have children older than we were the day we sang of "memories time can never take away."

Actually, time did take away my memory of what I had written in Teddy counterculture, in The New York Times.

Our class secretary, Kathy Allen Hanley, ap-peared as bubbly as ever, although she clammed up when I asked about other deaths, fearful that I would publish the names of some who "abused their bodies with alcohol and drugs."

Among the deceased is someone who was quite something at 18, a rough-hewn handsome fellow who did not get much out of books and did not go by the book. He "went steady" with brassy girls, but quietly cultivated prissy and studious ones on the side.

"I went out with him once or twice and he was really sensitive underneath all that swagger," I confided to Sue Kjeldsen, who now teaches math in a private school in Brooklyn. "I know," she said, "I dated him, too." I have a feeling that Suc would

After college, George transformed into rock singer Commander Cody, who never quite made it to the top of the charts.

But the turn-arounds appeared: Carol Marx Lena, who is sleek these days; Lou Leggio, then impossibly skinny, with vaguely artistic inclinations, but now beefy and running a delicatessen.

Whatever shape we're in, we are no longer in the process of becoming. An astounding proportion of us seem to have stayed on Long Island and in first marriages. Perhaps Bay Shore, diverse in ethnicity and income as it was and is, nonetheless imparted a small-town sense of roots to its children. No doubt midlife crises await some of us, but they will take us by surprise.

Members of my class have, by and large, made our choices. If we are lucky our adrenalin still rushes at work or play but we do not live on the edge of expectation minute by minute. To see the way it was, we have to go to the movies.

But What of the Late '60s? WE of the '60s loved the countercalture — the demonstrations, the sexual revolution, the love-ins, happenings and three-day rock festivals. But there is not a single movie out about this side of the '60s. Hollywood goes out of its way to avoid making such a film. In "Peggy Sue Got Married," Peggy Sue skipped all the way back to 1962. it's as if the late '60s never existed. Perhaps all that grooviness is just too embarrassing to remember. - Steve Palay, erstwhile member of the

New York Times Service RAGHDAD - Locked in conventional war with Iran, Iraq is lacing another war from within, waged by Kurdish guerrillas in the north and by a shadowy underground movement drawn from its Shiite Moslem majority, diplomats here say.

Both adversaries, diplomats and lraqi officials say, are sponsored by Iran. Tehran, they say, is seeking to exploit traditional grievances to harass Iraq's Baathist leadership and divert its full energies from the main battlefields in the center and south of the 730mile (1,170-kilometer) border.

In response, Iraq is said to have dynamited at least 500 Kurdish villages over the past six months in a ruthless drive to deny sanctuary to Kurdish guerrillas.

A Western diplomat called the razing of the villages and the relocation of 100,000 to 500,000 Kurds "a demographic revolution that has taken place under our noses in the past six months."

"The authorities have decided on a military solution to the Kurdish problem," said the diplomat, who visited the area recently.

ARTS/LEISURE

The Baryshnikov Crossover

By Anna Kisselgoff

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — The time has come to state the obvious. A few months short of turning 40. after years of injuries and after performing less and less frequently with the American Ballet Theater in New York, Mikhail Baryshnikov is not the dancer we first saw here in 1974. But that is the image we all still carry in our minds. There is, however, a compelling, if different, Barvshnikov in our midst

Even critics can experience a blinding moment of truth. Mine occurred recently, watching Baryshnikov perform splendidly with his own summer touring group, Baryshnikov & Co., at the Garden State Arts Center in New Jersey.

The flash of illumination was that Baryshnikov had become one of the greatest crossover artists in popular American culture. At the end of this concert, teen-age girls screamed and yelled - but not before women old enough to be their mothers (they were their mothers!) did the same. Even the men beamed and managed a smile.

Baryshnikov demonstrates an appeal far beyond the usual ballet audience. It is no accident that the producer of Baryshnikov & Co., self under grueling tour conditions which appears in rock-concert ven-than to dance with Ballet Theater? ues seating 10,000 people, is Bernie Lawrence, who has also booked Frank Sinatra.

But the Baryshnikov & Co. program - shortened versions of Don Quixote," and two George Balanchine ballets, "Apollo" and "Who Cares?" — suggested something else that is important. New Jersey led to a new train of thought. Baryshnikov was dancing with a severe ankle injury that had caused him to cancel eight performances earlier in the tour. One suspects, however, the truth is more deeply shaded. Like all great dancers of his age, Baryshni-kov cannot be as consistent in his technique as he was at the age of 26. At the same time, the old and stunning facility that did surface on this More significantly, the Baryshni-

When he made his debut in the title role at a Chicago dance festival in 1978, he imposed his own interpretation on the role -an angry young man full of chopped up, wrongly accented movements. A year later under Balanchine's guidance in the New York City Ballet, he seemed frozen in purity. But now he was totally relaxed within the idiom.

will be interesting to watch if he remains interested, as he was here, in what he is doing. It isn't virtuosity but artistic maturity that makes him compelling today. When he performed the part of the Broadway dancer in Balanchine's Gersh-win ballet, "Who Cares?" he showed us a dancer who reveled in the very act of dancing. In these performances, he seems to have found himself.

A Tribute to 'Groucho' Marxism

By Sheridan Morley national Herald Tribus LONDON - As a history of Marxism, "Groucho" (at the Cornedy) leaves rather too many endearing filial tribute to a great comic it works very well indeed, thanks largely to Frank Ferrante, a 24-vear-old American actor who plays the title role across 70 years of stage and screen history.

Originally cobbled together last year off-Broadway by Robert Fish-er and Groucho's son Arthur Marx, who also directs with the original New York cast, the script sets out to tell the story of Julius Henry Marx (the Groucho only came from a friendly fellow-vaudevillian after the brothers had spent years on the road as variously The 3 and 4 Nightingales) via several old here somewhere is something vastly more intriguing than just another backstage rags-to-riches saga. The best things come in threes: Swissair's First Class. Swissair's Business Class. Swissair's Economy Class.

That's why Swissair continues to offer three classes on all its aircraft, both on intercontinental and European flights at a time when, in Europe, just about every other major airline has cut its service back to a mere two classes. Because Swissair understands that luxury means having a choice. That no matter where you're off to, you should be able to fly just the way you want. No wonder so many travelers the world over consider Swissair a very good choice indeed, no matter what class they choose.

What Is a Samurai? Suzuki Chided on Lets the Customer Define It

By LEONARD SLOANE New York Times Service

EW YORK - When you have an automobile that can be considered a subcompact, a small pickup truck or a sports-utility vehicle, how do you advertise it? That was the problem facing Sozuki of America, which for two years has been importing the Samurai four-wheel-drive vehicle made in Japan by Sozuki Motor Co.

Its answer will be shouted loud and clear next month when a $30 million ad campaign breaks for the $7,995 model, featuring the theme "Never a Dull Moment."

In our campaign,

you won't see any reference to what kind of car it is.'

About 90 percent of this spending will be for network and spot elevision, with the remainder in outdoor and automotive enthusiast magazines. Each of the five 15- and 30-second commercials is different, though all wind up with the theme line across the screen.

N. Donglas Mazza, vice president and general manager of Suzuki of America Auto-motive Corp. in Brea, California, said that in the 102 other countries where the Samurai is available, "they see it as a sportsutility car. But in our campaign, you won't see any reference to what kind of car it is. Let the buyer define it."

"We're positioning this car as the antidote to traditional transportation," said Leonard Pearlstein, president of Keye-Donna-Pearlstein, the Los Angeles agency that handles the Suzuki account. "We say that it can be for all kinds of people."

There is vodka from the Soviet Union, vodka from Sweden, from Finland, France and Ireland. Japan even. So why not vodka from Iceland?

Gleannore Distilleries Co. of Louisville, Kentucky, is about to Gleannore Distilleries Co. of Louisville, Kentucky, is about to introduce Elduris — eldur meaning fire and is, ice in Icelandic. It's pronounced el-dur-eess. The campaign for initial markets in Kentucky and Maryland and in Washington was designed by Grybauskas & Partners, a New York agency that had to find a way to distinguish the Icelandic firewater from the many imported entrants, some of them already fallen by the wayside.

"We don't want to be one of those vodkas that came and vent," said Roland V. Grybauskas, the agency's president.
Imported vodka's share of overall U.S. vodka sales has risen to 5.9 percent from 1 percent in 1980.

Elduris comes in a handsome bottle and is positioned in the $12 to $14 range against Absolut, Stolichnaya and Finlandia, the imported vodka leaders in that order, according to an industry information source, Impact Databank

But Grybanskas and Glenmore are trying to reach sophisticated customers in a different way and to give them some taste of celand itself, hoping that the image of an unspoiled country far to the north will appeal to the sense of adventure and rub off on

Japan Chip Pact

U.S. Firms Claim Noncompliance

WASHINGTON - U.S. semi-conductor makers told the Reagan administration Tuesday that Japan still had not fully complied with a one-year accord governing sales of computer chips, despite U.S. trade

The Semiconductor Industry Association said that U.S. companies' share of the Japanese market, at 9 percent, is 2 percentage points below the level existing before the preement was signed.

That compares with the share of bout 50 percent or more that the U.S. industry enjoys in all other national markets, the report said. The industry group contended that failure of the Japanese to live up to the agreement in full has cost U.S. companies $162 million in po-tential sales.

The government of Japan has denied repeatedly that it has violated the accord. The pact called for Japan to halt the "dumping" — or pricing below production costs—of computer chips in U.S. and other markets, and to give U.S. companies more access to lucrative Japa-

The industry group acknowledged, however, that Ispan had reduced its dumping of computer chips in the United States and it noted "a gradual reduction" in narkets outside the United States

The administration imposed $300 million in penalty tariffs in April on selected Japanese elec-tronic products to protest alleged Japanese failure to comply with the agreement. In June, President Ronald Reagan lifted $51 million of the tariffs, citing some movement toward Japanese compliance.

But in a letter to Mr. Reagan, the industry association's president, Andrew A. Procassini, said the administration should consider reapplying the sanctions in full.

As part of the pact, the United States suspended investigations that could have led to stiff penalty duties on Japanese computer chips.

Stronger Pulse for Texan Economy But Slow Recovery, Diversification From Oil Expected

By Peter Applebome
New York Times Service
HOUSTON — Early this month a 70-year-old former U.S. Treasury secretary, presidential aspirant and Texas governor stood outside a Texas courthouse and confronted the stark arithmetic that had left him with $93 million in debts and $13 million

"Life is a series of changed experiences, and I'm going through one," said John B. Connally, who on July 31 filed for reorganization of his personal fi-nances under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code and for liquidation under Chapter 7 of his real estate partnership with a former Texas lieutenant governor, Ben Barnes.

Mr. Connally declared that he was confident of making a comeback, and Texas is a place that has always viewed optimism as a moral virtue. But as the last casualties of the state's oil slump top-ple. LONDON — The publisher Robert Maxwell said Tuesday he wants to acquire the entire share capital of Guinness Peat Group PLC, the financial ser-vices group now the subject of a bid from New Zealand's Equiticorp Holdings Ltd.

Mr. Maxwell said in a televi sion interview that he had increased his holding from 10.3 percent on Monday to "less than 15 percent," the level above which the Bank of England can block share-buying in a bank. He had not previously announced his intention. Mr. Maxwell said any bid

The company has been effectively controlled by the government since May, when management's representation on the 15-member board was scaled back to six members. The Presidential Commission on Good Government, which controls 51 percent of San Miguel, boosted its representa-

The company planned to open a fourth brewery on the island of Negros later this year and a fifth on Mindanao island in 1988. It was also planning a chain of small ice cream plants. But Mr. del Rosario said the deadlock involving 38.1 million sequestered San Miguel shares was sending out the wrong signals to foreign and local businessmen.

"Government interference in the affairs of what is in effect the flagship of the private sector is not good," he asserted. The disputed shares, controlled by Unit-

Earlier this month, San Miguel filed a petition in the Supreme Court seeking an end to the sequestration.

Mr. del Rosario said that the commission had not responded to the petition. "Our case says the sequestration was never valid because there is no ill-gotten wealth involved." he said. Recent Supreme Court rulings have barred the commission from replacing directors of sequestered companies and from interfering in their business affairs.

The presidential commission's nominees on the board have demanded changes in San Miguel's by-laws, changes in its executive committee, and representation on the boards of subsidiaries. It "even wanted to review the compensation of our employees." Mr. del Rosario said.

The reason for the failure of the compromise reached in April is unclear, Mr. del Rosario said. But he said that it may have broken down because of a suit filed before the Securities and Exchange Commission by Eduardo de los Angeles, the director of

THE FORGING OF THE UNION, 1781-1789.

L pects of the Constitution because the lan-guage is so familiar. But after a Committee of Detail had hammered out the basic charter for a federal government 200 years ago this sum-mer, a Committee of Style was formed to clarify and, as we now realize, even beautify the wording of the articles. Five of the best writers among the delegates to the Constitutional Convention were selected to polish the final version. In his masterly new study, "The Forging of the Union," Richard B. Morris, professor of history emeritus of Co-lumbia University, and one of the country's essential scholars of the Constitutional era, calls these writers "the most talented penmen" in the young nation.

William Samuel Johnson of Connecticut chaired the committee, which included Gouverneur Morris of Pennsylvania, James Madison of Virginia, Rufus King of Massachusetts, and Alexander Hamilton of New York. Writing by committee is no way to build a paragraph or a Constitution, yet somehow it worked in September 1787. Their changes of substance and nuance were accepted. Phrases such as "a more perfect Union" and "Secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity" contained dreams of permanence. Some phrases were dropped, such as calling the president "His Excellency" -dearly too royal for a republic. Years later, Madison praised the pen of Gouverneur Morris for the Constitution's elegant phraseology

The title of one of the chapters has a modern ring: "The Military-Fiscal Complex." After the Revolution, the states clung to their militias. That is the reason behind the wording of the Second Amendment: "A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed." Advocates of private arsenals will not appreciate Morris's interpretation: "From this phrasing it seems to

to carry a gun or other lethal weapons."

With broad historical strokes, Morris shows how the Union was forged out of adversity. He writes that the opening words of the Preamble, "We the People of the United States," rather than of individual States, was a brilliant notion. because the phrase designated "the people as the source of authority." Such observations appear all through his scholarly and readable

But both sides stressed that the real impact of the ruling would not be clear until the arbitrator, Thomas Roberts, decided what remedies to impose.

"It's certainly a moral victory at this point and it could be a lot more than that before this is over," said Dong Baldwin, who represents Kirk Gibson, the most prominent player cited in the grievance. "Depending on the remedies, this could be one of the most significant sport decisions in the last 10 years."

Gibson, who re-signed with Detroit after receiving no offers from other teams following the 1985 season, said he was pleased. "Obviously, I definitely agree with the decision," he said. "What the consequences of the decision will be is what I'll be interested in."

Niekro, also part of the grievance, said the ruling Malcolm Prine, president of the Pittsburgh Pirates, "doesn't surprise me at all." Church, who testified said the cinb would try to rebuild by relying on during the hearings, added, though, that the ruling developing minor league players rather than signing alone had little meaning. To all flows from the remefree agents. And Joe McIlvaine, vice president of the Mets, observed that the team "traditionally has not signed many free agents. We signed a few players like Rusty Staub, Tom Hausman and Mike Cubbage, and lost Claudell Washington, Danny Heep and Ray

Knight. But we have not been very active in that area. Roberts found that baseball's owners had conspired to "destroy" free agency after the 1985 season. He said that free agents "surely had a value at some price and yet no offers were advanced" unless the players' previ-ous teams expressed no interest in re-signing them. Roberts said he would meet with both union and management representatives to devise remedies. The players' union has filed a separate grievance charging the owners with collusion after the 1986

Donald Febr, executive director of the union, said it would seek remedies for the ruling through money or new free agency opportunities for players already affected, along with punitive damages from the owners. He would not say how much money the union woold seek. Barry Rona, executive director of the owners' player

N EW YORK — Transcript of ery state and every city — interview with Senator Joseph Q. Sure, Senator, but yo Biden about his curious propensity for speaking in other men's ora-

Question: Senator, when did you first notice this impulse to ma other people's oratory your own?

Answer: Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking, I want to say how delighted I am to be back here in this great city. I am reminded of a story. A funny thing happened to me on the way over here today --

Q. To move on, Senator: If it tiens out this publicity about your curious propensity was inspired by political opponents to knock you out idential race, how will

A. With malice toward none; with charity for all. With firmness in the right, as God gives me to see the right. I will strive on to finish the work I am in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his or-

A. Gentlemen may cry, peace, peace - but there is no peace. Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? I know not what course others may take, but as for

Q. Considering the difficulties the United States faces today, sir, do you think it wants a dreamer in the White House?

A. I say to you, my friend, even though we face the difficulties of today and tomorrow, I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream. I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed - we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal. When we allow freedom to ring from every

Q. Sure, Senator, but you're being attacked by political enemies who say that if you got elected president, your inaugural address would be written by Martin Van Buren and your State of the Union messages by Franklin Pierce. Why are you

Q. Speaking of attacks, Senator, what is your answer to Democrats who fear that if nominated your acceptance speech will say, "Now let us sit upon the earth and tell sad stories of the death of the Democratic Party"?

A. To those Democrats, as to all fearful Americans, I say, the only thing we have to fear is fear itself, nameless, unreasoning fear that -Q. Sure, but what'll you offer potential allies to fight with you in

A. I have never offered anything but blood, toil, tears and sweat, nor will this generation recoil from the fight, for to some generations much is given, of other generations much is asked, and this generation has a

You're not a reporter, are you? You're another candidate for the Democratic nomination.

Q. Abose me as you will, Sena but you will never make me give back my little dog Checkers. (Senator Biden left the room too hastily to hear the interviewer's spirited statement.)

Vanessa in the Chocolate Factory

By Benedict Nightingale LONDON — There was a vast toy rabbit in pink tartan dungarees, an even bigger brown ted-dy, a stuffed koala bear, and on the sofa in the middle two living and conceivably human figures. One of these, in striped pajamas and cuddling a battered Winniethe-Pooh, was unmistakably the actor Freddie Jones.

But the woman beside him was harder to identify, heavily camouflaged in rouge and lipstick and gold bangles, spiraling coils and loops of off-blonde hair, and black chiffon twirling coyly and cutely down her torso. Everything about her was in the most impeccably awful taste. Surely it wasn't, it couldn't be, Vanessa Redgrave?

It was, and playing as outré a movie role as ever a major classical actress can have essayed: the go-getting widow of an unfortunate gentleman who has tumbled into the melting pot at the candy factory where he works, losing his life but adding undeniable body to the firm's rather dismal chocolate creams. As the public discovers a taste for this new, improved product, she launches into a less literal variety of cannibalism. She voraciously seduces a management trainee, then a corporate whiz kid and finally the chocolate company's chairman. That's

deeply in love with his model trains, his nursery menagerie and the memory of his mother. "Consuming Passions" is Redgrave's first sustained comic role on the screen since Karel Reisz cast her in "Morgan!" two decades ago, and if events on the Pinewood studio set were even slightly representative, she's been embracing the opportunity with rare gusto. "Chocky for teddy," she giggled, feeding the big bear a candy. "Chocky for bunny," she purred as she turned to the gigantic rabbit. At this point, Jones shyly suggested that he, too, might like a share of the feast. A great predatory grin spread across Redgrave's face, she slipped a chocolate halfway into her a character is typical of Vanessa mouth, and, cooing and crooning. nor indeed possible, since they were busy stroking the gurgling Jones in surprising places. "Cut, cut, cut," he cried, to ughter from the camera crew. The director, Giles Foster, repeated the order. "That was terrific," he gently opined. "After the next take," replied Jones, "I shall need a large brandy. A very large bran-dy, otherwise I may be taken ill."

"I laughed when I first read it." she said in explaining why she took the role. "I laugh when I come to work reading my part, and I laugh every time I hear Freddie Jones saying those incredible lines. I haven't worked with a script that's so good as this through and through. I didn't want to change a single thing, and that's very, very rare." The movie is, she concedes, a bit like one of the old Ealing comedies, but darker, more biting and fundamentally more serious, "I would prefer the audiences to decide for themselves what it's about," she said, "but even just hearing the story, you see it's got the blackness of our times in it. It seems to me a very sharp social and political comment on our so-Her own character, Mrs. Garza, is as self-seeking as almost everyone else in the movie. "The image she maintains and the style she puts on is the 1960s, a superannuated Brigitte Bardot. She's a relic of the past, but she's also quite ferociously out to get the best she can from life with the best tool she's got, which is a ferocious appetite for sex and a gleeful way of going about it."

Mrs. Garza claims to be Maltese in origin, and the accent Redgrave has adopted is derived from people of that nationality she has met or overheard in Loudon. But if some pedant found the odd flaw in her vowels, she wouldn't altogether worry. "The point about the character is that you should wonder about her all the time, you should never be quite sure she is what she says she is."

To use tiny details to suggest something slightly sinister about painstaking in preparing for a role. She immerses herself in research, reading all the back-ground material she can find; and, of course, she takes great care to look absolutely authentic. The preparation for Mrs. Garza was mainly visual and physical. Redgrave relied heavily on the collaboration of those in charge of her clothes, makeup and hair For instance, I decided she's had some fantastically ferocious bleachings and has got a lot of very black roots. But it was Peter en, the hairdresser, who translated that into the right kind of wig. And his decisions in turn luenced my portrayal, because the hair suggested someone con-cerned with her image, yet pretty ruthless at the same time, because she doesn't care that much if the image isn't complete." Then Naomi Donne, the chief makeup artist, suggested a gold tooth for the character and designed the tattoo Redgrave wanted on her right arm, a snake, with poison dripping from its fangs, wrapped round an anchor. The idea was that Mrs. Garza should first appear to be a conventional Mediterranean widow in respectable blacks. But she would only have to take off her cardigan and flash a smile for the audience to realize there was something a bit buccaneering about her. And Redgrave and the costume designer, Barbara Kidd, riffled a lot through the racks of secondhand shops in search of suitable attire.

"I do a lot of preparation, but I don't plan. I don't decide in advance how something ought to be. I let the other characters, the situation, the room, the actual physical circumstances of that particular moment tell me what I should be doing. I let the invention come, without thinking about it - in fact, I don't even invent it."

Vanessa Redgrave first made ber name as a vibrant Rosalind in a Royal Shakespeare Company production of "As You Like It" back in 1961, and still feels as committed to the stage as to the screen. Recently she's played Cleopatra, Katharina in The Taming of the Shrew," and Arkadina Chekhov's "Seaguil," all in the West End. Early in 1988 she will be appearing there in O'Neill's "Touch of the Poet," and later in the year in a new play called "Madhouse in Goa," by Martin Sherman, the American author of stage is that in the space of two and a half hours, the actors, the three creating something that will not ever happen again in quite that way. When the conditions are right, when the play is really good, when the actors are really listen ing to each other and to the audience, you get this wonderful, contradictory feeling that it's all occurring for the very first time."

That can scarcely be achieved in movies; yet Redgrave is not tempted to belittle her work in films or regard it as second best. Her work in movies has, she believes, improved her acting in the

"It was Karel Reisz who explained the difference to me. In the theater, he said, you're shaping a whole performance, all the transitions, all the changes, remembering what happened before and what happened after-ward. In a film, all the shaping is done in the editing room. So the actor's task is to concentrate in-tensely and totally on what is happening at the individual moment. The more you do so, the more alive it will all become for you and for everyone else." More and more, Redgrave's work in films has encouraged her to trust her instincts in the theater, too; and in neither medium has her overall interpretation visibly suffered. There were moments in "Playing for Time" -- which Redgrave thinks more difficult and challenging than anything she's tack-led before or since — when feeling seemed to move beyond the spontaneous, almost beyond the instantaneous. Yet the character didn't lack emotional consistency. Her award-winning performance in "The Seagull" was packed with fresh, guileless invention, too; yet the total picture was still of an egoist and blithe exhibi-tionist hiding her terror of age and emptiness from herself. Armed with that hair, that tattoo and that gold tooth, ber Mrs. Garza in "Consuming Passions" will doubtless prove pretty surprising too - and also, perhaps, add up to an ogre for our time.

op Paul Marcinkus charged in papers filed in New York that Doubleday & Co. Inc. and its book chb, the Literary Guild, illegally used his name for commercial pur poses in the novel, "In the Name of the Father," written by A.J. Quin-nell. The complaint said the book uses the archbishop's name as a principal character who "instigates the assassination of the late premier of the Soviet Union, Ymi Andropov." Andropov died in office of apparent natural causes in February 1984. The publishers disclaimer said in part: "This book is a work of fiction . . . Some real people such as . . . Paul Marcinrns appear as characters in the book to give it a sense of historical accuracy." Earlier this year, Mar-cinkus and two laymen who deal in money matters at the Vatican wen charged in Italy's worst post-World War II banking scandal. Milan magistrates issued the warrants Feb. 20 after an investigation of the 1982 collapse of Banco Ambrosiano. The warrants charged the fraudulent bankruptcy. Italy's highest court threw out an arrest warrant for the archbishop because of a 1929 treaty forbidding interference in Vatican affairs.
